Dear Potential Employer:

First, I would like to get the obvious out of the way. I realize the position that I am applying for, in terms of title and salary, may not appear as a next career move for me. I do, however, believe that is a step forward in my life.

After graduating with a BS in Communications from the University of Miami in 1997, I was one of the first writers for a small internet startup company that would eventually become WebMD. However, life soon took me away from my passion for journalism.

Now, after over 30 years as a leader and educator in the orthodontic laboratory industry, I am attempting to redirect my career towards communications. Much of the requested experience is not quantifiable but communications was a part of everything that I did.

I created collateral marketing materials and informative articles for my clients as a laboratory owner. Collaborating with graphic and web designers, I produced all of the copy for my website and brochures. Then, our industry was swamped by a technological tsunami that changed it in ways never seen before. It was a paradigm shift that I addressed.

As the founder of a national, non-profit association to help educate my industry on the new technologies, The Orthodontic Resource Group, I created a range of materials, both internal and external, to promote the association to industry professionals, educate members, and entice sponsors. For our inaugural conference, I crafted all of the copy for a 36-page magazine in one week.

I was blogging before there was such a thing as a blog. My website, www.thechrischronicles.com, launched in 2001 and has been evolving ever since as time permitted. It now includes a podcast, photography and videos that are regularly published in various social media outlets to inform, educate and entertain.

A long time ago, I learned it is more important to know what I don't know rather than what I do know. I am eager to join a team where I can add my passion, skills and experience while collaborating with colleagues and clients.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,
Christopher Gajewski
